At Halbert this past week ...

Leaves are turning vibrant reds, yellows and brown .. why is that?

Students using their natural curiosity to explore, experiment and make a theory of why things are the way they are.

This is play based inquiry learning!

Technology is a tool to support students' learning. It is a great opportunity to tap into different learning styles and help everyone arrive at a common understanding of the concepts being studied.

Math is all around us. It is most definitely in games.
Math is actually very fun!

This weekend is a season of giving thanks!

Beautiful trees with leaves representing what each student is thankful for!

For early years it is crucial for students to understand quantities and values of numbers. It is good to memorize number sequence but it is so much better for children to know and understand values. Let your children learn and anchor their understanding on the quantity of 5 and the quantity of 10.

When students play great things happen -- new words are used, life is imagined in simple yet complex ways.

Here, Kindergarten students enjoy imaging being pumpking farmers.

Cooking ... it is where science and math become real! Here, the Grade 4 Rising Chefs are cooking their first recipe ... vegetarian or chicken quesadilla. They learned to saute mushrooms and grill peppers!

In play you get to test theories of stability! Build and let it fall down and then ask ... “How can we make sure it won’t fall again?” That’s how adult architects have learned over the years! Our earliest learners and just following suit!
